

Reducing teacher workloads and building confidence

Case study: Terrington St Clement Community School

Terrington St Clement Community School found reporting and marking a time-consuming process. However, after they started using Doodle, staff were able to gain in-depth insights into each pupil's progress in just a few clicks!

We spoke to Amanda, the school's headteacher, about how using Doodle 'little and often' has helped to reduce teacher workloads and save them invaluable time.

Hi Amanda! Please could you give us a brief overview of how you use Doodle in your school?

We set Doodle as homework and use it as a 'little and often' tool for targeted children.

We name the Top Doodling Class in our newsletters and celebrate them when they join the 100-Day Streak Club (a club for pupils who have used Doodle for a hundred days in a row!).

That's great to hear! Do parents also get involved with Doodle?

Parents like to visit the online Parent Dashboard to view their child's progress. Lots also choose to join the Spring and Summer Challenges, seasonal events where children can earn rewards by using Doodle 'little and often'.

Parents like to see that their children are motivated by the programme, and this makes homework far easier to sell.

"Doodle has had a significant impact on reducing workloads and saving time ... marking homework."

— Amanda, headteacher, Terrington St Clement Community School

Has Doodle had an impact on pupils' confidence and attainment?

Children love the programme. It's clearly impacting the confidence of some of our pupils. The assessment tracking data also helps staff to see their progress in key areas for development.

Fantastic! And finally, has Doodle helped to reduce staff workloads?

Homework is set online; it can be scheduled in advance and is self-marked. It has had a significant impact on reducing workloads and saving time marking homework.

The online Teacher Dashboard helps teachers to spot gaps in knowledge and the areas that children are struggling with at a glance — this also feeds into lesson planning.
